Pub and restaurant group, ETM Group, have announced the appointment of new head chef, Pieter Fitz-Dreyer of Chiswell Street Dining Rooms, in London.

Prior to his appointment, Fitz-Dreyer was head chef in London's luxury South Place Hotel where he was responsible for 18 chefs overseeing all aspects of dining, including room service and large events catering.

Fitz-Freyer said: "I am really excited to be part of ETM, a group I've always admired for their commitment to sourcing the very best British ingredients."

The new head chef has worked for some of the most established hotels and restaurants across the world, following appointments at The Atlantic Hotel's Michelin-starred Ocean restaurant in Jersey and two years at head chef at the five-star Carlisle Bay Resort in Antigua, West Indies. He also completed a five-year position as head chef at the award-winning Indigo restaurant, One Aldwych Hotel, Covent Garden.

James Lyon-Shaw, operations director for ETM, said: "Pieter brings a huge amount of industry expertise and experience to help us take the food at Chiswell Street Dining Rooms to new and exciting heights."

Fitz-Dreyer will oversee all kitchen operations and the running of the food service from lunch through to afternoon tea and dinner. He will also be responsible for menu development and daily sourcing of the best local and seasonal British ingredients, sourced from select UK farms and niche suppliers that ETM Group prides itself on.

Chiswell Street Dining Rooms is a Grade II listed property, located within the transformed Whitbread Brewery building, now home to five-star hotel, The Montcalm.
